About the Institute for Fiscal Studies

Since its foundation in 1969, IFS has established itself as Britain’s leading independent microeconomic research institute and as an authoritative commentator on tax and welfare policy, tax law, inequality and poverty, pensions, productivity, competition policy, consumer behaviour, education, the public finances and development economics.

Its goal is to promote effective economic and social policies by understanding better their impact on individuals, families, businesses and the government’s finances. The Institute’s findings are based on rigorous analysis, detailed empirical evidence and in-depth institutional knowledge.
Help us to inform and improve government policy and public debate through high-quality, independent research

IFS has a vital public role, providing independent and accessible commentary on the most important economic issues facing the country.

Our high-quality empirical research is frequently cited by journalists and politicians when assessing the impact of public policy decisions on individuals, households, businesses and the nation’s public finances. Our commentary on party manifestos and government policies leads the public debate, providing individuals with the tools to understand and evaluate complex policies. What’s more, IFS is entirely independent of political parties, companies, individuals and pressure groups, allowing us to hold governments of all stripes to account when their numbers don’t add up or their policies are less than transparent.

How you can help
Almost all of the Institute’s income is raised through traditional research funding, a reflection of the very high quality of our work. However, this doesn’t cover everything we’d like to do, particularly when it comes to providing quick responses to policy announcements. Support from corporate members and the general public allows us to be flexible, commenting on policy as it happens, and to continue to provide everything we do free of charge to everyone on our website.

Corporate membership
Corporate membership is available at two different levels:

Standard corporate membership costs £5,000 (+VAT) per year, and members receive the following benefits:
• Five free places at all charged IFS events, including a delegate place at our prestigious residential conference.
• Reduced member rate attendance for all other staff of the company.
• One free copy of all our printed publications.
• Invitations to private presentations by senior IFS staff around the launch of the Green Budget or our annual Budget analysis.
• Invitations to corporate member round-table briefings with high-profile guest speakers.

Gold corporate membership costs £10,000 (+VAT) per year, and includes all of the standard benefits plus bespoke additional options, such as:
• Additional free places at all charged events, including the prestigious IFS residential conference.
• A private individual briefing once a year with the IFS Director or Deputy Director at the member’s office with local staff on topics of the member’s choice.
• The opportunity for the Director or Deputy Director to participate as a guest speaker at an event organised by the company.
• An invitation to join senior IFS staff and a high-profile speaker at a private dinner following the IFS Annual Lecture. Our most recent speaker was Professor Penny Goldberg.

Individual membership
Available to anyone who sets up a regular monthly donation of at least £5 per month, individual members receive the following benefits:
• An invitation to our annual members’ event with presentations from IFS researchers and a drinks reception.
• Advance ticket booking for events that are likely to sell out, such as our Budget briefings.
• Regular e-newsletters outlining our recent work and other key highlights, as well as printed updates such as InBrief magazine.
• The right to take part in elections for members’ representatives on the IFS Council.

Editorial Note

Fiscal Studies is a forum for original contributions in public economics. Its goal is to promote the rigorous discussion of public policy and contribute to informing policymaking and its public debate. To that end, the journal publishes articles studying the behaviour of individuals and firms, their responses to public policy and the wider effects of government action on the economy, with emphasis on the application of microeconomic insights and empirical methods. Articles are presented in a clear and accessible format designed to appeal to a broad international readership of academics, policymakers and practitioners.

We encourage submissions from individuals not associated with the Institute, particularly from academic economists working on applied problems whose results have topical policy application. Fiscal Studies has always promoted the dissemination of quality research in a form understandable to a wide audience, and we intend to strengthen this tradition. To maintain the topicality of the journal, submissions will be refereed quickly.

Submission of Manuscripts

Papers, preferably no more than 7,500 words long, should be submitted through our online submission system, Editorial Express, with a short abstract of no more than 200 words and a JEL classification. Visit the journal website, http://www.fiscalstudies.ac.uk, for more information.
